I Let the parents of our girls give them as thorough and liberal an education as lies in their power. While school children, piace is in their way to earn their own pocket-money—a certain sum weekly—by good conduct, excellent scholarship, or cheerful aid in the home duties. This will teach an appreciation of the value of money, and will imbuse the girls with a love of self-help and sturdy independence. Acquainted with the delights of self-earned money, there will be lacking in later days, if thrown upon their cown re-ment with encages.

A proper knowledge of books will enable them to become successful teachers in our schools, a very available accuracy of self-sup-tort. A false if rounded as 'music habit charms where larger would fail in a stractive and self-sup-port in her own demands of self-sup-port in her own domicile. of self-earned money, there will be lacking in later days, if thrown upon their own resources, that false pride that is so great an obstacle to honest work.

Study the girls from early childhood and learn for what they are best fitted. Having learned it, give them the best training for that special career. But a small proportion of our great army of girls is specially gifted, but teach them to feel that it is not talent that is needed to insure success—that "ninety-nine per cent. of ambittion to try and one per cent. of genius will accomplish anything in this world." With such a training our girls can face the problem of self-support and solve it for themselves.

Extensive Proportions.

How can a girl be fitted to best make her own living? That is the question at issue.

Have her choose a line of work as early in life as possible, and then use all her energy to become a perfect mistress of it.

Supplied and Club Contest.

Supplied as early as twelve years of age she thinks sho would like to become a stenographer. Lave her begin the study then, Lether reading and education be in reference to this work. Have her become thoroughly proficient in it. The enthusiast, the master, the expert, can always find reminerative employment.

I select stenography simply for illustration. She may have an inclination to become a telegraph operator, a milliner, a teacher, a doctor—shatever it is, have her decide at the carliest possible moment of her life, stick to her decision and work and attidy with might and main to excel.

The person who can do a certain work better than any one class is sure to be in demand. These are the days of specialists. There is room only at the top. C. L. P.
